

AIDSinfo, a service of the United States Department of Health and Human Services, has released guidelines for HIV/AIDS physicians in a new web-friendly format, entitled:

"Guidelines for the Use of Antiretroviral Agents in HIV-1-Infected Adults and Adolescents"

AIDSinfo now provides the guideline information contained in the customary printer-friendly format in a new web-friendly format. This new web-friendly format is designed to make it easier to navigate through the Adult and Adolescent Guidelines and to quickly search for drug-related information.

Discover the potential benefits of this new web-friendly format, which include:

- Easier navigation: A clickable table of contents will potentially make finding information faster
- Improved search results: A search engine for Adult and Adolescent Guidelines, which uses keywords, multiple terms, or exact phases (with a spell check for commonly misspelled words). Drug-related information can be searched for by generic name, brand name or acronym. Search results can display information from the text, tables, references, or any combination of the three. Research results can also be displayed alphabetically or in the order the information appears in the Adult and Adolescent Guidelines.
