The ACLU of Delaware created and piloted a toolkit for preventing, monitoring, and responding to police interference with SEPs and their clients. Based on existing best practices, this toolkit includes practical tips on building rapport with police leadership, PowerPoint presentations for roll call training and educational materials for clients, as well as a comprehensive description of a surveillance system that can be used to track and address incidents in which police operations come into conflict with clients or staff. The website provides easy access to the toolkit, bundling all of the printed and multi-media materials created through the project.

COPS HR has been established within the Burnet Institute's Centre for Harm Reduction to establish a network of police who are supportive of harm reduction. COPS HR can also assist individuals and organizations who are working with police in developing positive working relationships focusing on more effective responses to drug issues in their community. The website provides access to training material and other resources including advocacy tools and a forum for problem-solving, sharing of experiences, information and ideas.
