The California Department of Health Services Immunization Branch and Emergency Preparedness Office, the California Department of Education, and the California Distance Learning Health Network are partnering to create a comprehensive multi-media training program to prepare local health department personnel and county and district school administrators for a possible influenza pandemic.

Pandemic Influenza Preparedness for Schools, a broadcast, tabletop exercise, and online toolkit, will launch May 17, 2007. The broadcast will also be available by webcast and shortly thereafter on DVD, so that local health departments, county offices of education, school districts, and schools can all leverage the tools and information for their own planning efforts.

Topics that will be covered in the training include school closure, continuity of education, average daily attendance (ADA), issues specific to certain populations such as preschools and students living in dormitories, and how schools can incorporate pandemic flu planning into their existing safe school plans.
