

Staying safe after exposure

If your child has been exposed to COVID-19, they may be infected and could spread the infection to others.

Have your kid tested right away. Your kid's school or doctor may suggest that they get tested again a few days later.

Talk to your kid's doctor and school. Follow their advice about staying away from others.

In some cases, your school may say it's okay for your kid to remain in school with their mask on, even after being exposed to COVID-19, also known as modified quarantine.

Following these tips will help protect your loved ones at home and keep schools a safer place.
