CA 2018 General Election Key Facts

- California ranked 31st among the 50 states for eligible voter turnout at 49.6%.4

- Registered voter turnout ranged from 76.0% in the Central/Southeast Sierra region to 58.2% in the San Joaquin Valley (Figure 1).5

Reasons for Low Voter Participation

- Lack of culturally relevant communication to mobilize minority populations.6
- Low trust in government is a top reason for not registering to vote.7
- Time constraints is a top reason for not always voting.7

Vulnerable Groups and Voting

The Every Vote Counts Act (SB 759) was enacted in 2018 to provide voters—especially those with disabilities, and non-English speakers—an opportunity to correct or verify signature mismatches on their mail-in ballots.8

In California, anyone serving a prison sentence or on parole is prohibited from voting. The imprisonment rate is disproportionately high among African American and Latino men.9

Increasing awareness about voting eligibility after completing prison sentences could help improve voter participation in these vulnerable groups.10

How Voting is Important to Health

Voter participation is an important measure of civic engagement. Civic engagement can improve health by building social capital, defined as resources that individuals and groups access through social networks, providing a mutual benefit. Engaging in meaningful civic activities can also help individuals develop a sense of purpose and decrease feelings of social isolation.1
