

MECHANIC KILLED! TRUCK FALLS OFF LIFT

In a recent incident, a 46-year-old mechanic, Ernesto M.*, died when a truck he was repairing fell off a lift. The truck was too long, and the arms of the lift did not reach the proper lift points. Ernesto's employer did not have safety or training programs.

WHAT WENT WRONG?

The wrong type of lift was used.

There was no safety program to make sure workers used lifts correctly.

WHAT SHOULD BE DONE?

Only use lifts that can support a vehicle at the points designated by the vehicle manufacturer.

Employers must have an Illness and Injury Prevention Program (IIPP) to make sure workers are fully trained and follow safe work practices.

The California Fatality Assessment and Control Evaluation (FACE) program has been investigating work-related deaths since 1992. The goal of the FACE program is to prevent these deaths by informing workers and managers of worksite hazards and how to avoid them.
